Scales & Tales

The Kenosha Sport Fishing and Conservation Association February meeting at the Moose Lodge not only had Mike Steffes from Warrior Lures as a guest speaker, but also mainlined a new president (Marcello Covelli), a new Vice President, (Tom Zapp). Also voted in were new board members Paul Davis and Todd Laba. Congratulations to all and the best of luck.

Seventeen new members also joined the same night. Not renew but new! That alone is a 24% increase. All of our past members have not renewed yet but the year is young. With this and our new web site (400 hits last month). We are on our way to a banner year.

Lets not in any way forget what got us here. In 2009 we had some extensive repairs done to the rearing pond, had our first swap meet, 170 registrants for "Fish-N-Fun", Bob Deangalis supported us from the Harbor side Bait and Tackle, Ed Peterson from the Outdoor World has given us exposure, in a good way, and also Joe Herter from Gander Mountain has helped Jack Springer with Fly Tying. Just kept ourselves out of the red speaks volumes, too bad we didn't run the country.

We also had the opportunity to help out with the Red Cross and the Kenosha Food Shelter, also the Pikes Creek clean up. And of course our fallen members. Yes a solemn year, but promising.

Hopefully we remember to respect our past leaders, and now to look up to the new.

If you know of a business that would be interested in advertising through our web site, fee is $10.00 a month. Advertisements in the newsletter varies. Please contact Dave Gehrke, see the 1st page under supporting membership. Sample add on page 7.

This past week I have sent the clubs directory out via e-mail. To recent members. This also verified my proper e-mail address. I appreciate everyone's patience in answering my questions and phone calls. This will verify the newsletter going where it should. If any member who has a e-mail address and has stated so in their enrollment should have received this email with the directory. If not e-mail pbjuga@yahoo.com and this will be rectified. The monthly newsletter is sent as a PDF attachment.

Later the corrected directory will be sent the same way. As the year progress's this list will change.

The elections brought forth new members, let's welcome John Anderson, Arnie Arredondo, Kurt Burchall, Jake Gejowski, Rich Espie James Hanrahan, Emil Harmsen, Eric Hauke, Alan Johnson, Jim Johnson, John Krieger, Karl Mayer, Lou Molitor, David Scott, Rich Tanner, Jack Verdoni, Tim Wojnicz. Also Mark Hasenberg has been nominated for Honorary Membership. We thank all of you!!!

Our club has all the right goals, I have a feeling this year we will become fine tuned, lean and mean. The association must be organized, our time is our donation and must be utilized effectively. Let's make 2010 a year to recognize.

Feds pass on surest solution to Asian carp advance

TRAVERSE CITY, Mich. – The surest way to keep rampaging Asian carp from gaining a foothold in the Great Lakes is to sever the link between Lake Michigan and the Mississippi River basin, created by engineers in Chicago more than a century ago.

That would thrill environmentalists and those who make their living in the $7 billion Great Lakes fishing industry, which could be devastated by a carp invasion. Not so the barge operators who move millions of tons of commodities on the Chicago-area waterways each year.

And so, pulled in different directions by both, as well as politicians in the Great Lakes states, the Obama administration this week proposed a $78.5 million plan that appears to make no one happy.

"It appears to be politically negotiated rather than scientifically based ... sort of like trying to cut the baby in half," said Thom Cmar, an attorney with the Natural Resources Defense Council. "It offers a lot of middle-ground alternatives with no discussion of why any of them would actually work."

Shippers worry about a promised study that would examine closing more often a pair of navigational locks at Chicago, and the prospect that a long-term study could recommend severing the connection between the river and the lakes for good.

Environmentalists, meanwhile, fear the plan's reliance on strengthening an electric barrier designed to block the carp's advance — and other measures, such as stepping up efforts to find and kill fish that may have slipped through — is an expensive gamble that might not be enough to ward off an infestation.

"We're spending close to $80 million just for a short-term deterrent," said Joel Brammeier, president of the Alliance for the Great Lakes, an environmental group. "We need to stop pushing money toward temporary solutions and get everyone on track toward investing in one that works for good — and that means absolute physical separation."

Great Lakes since 1989. Bighead and silver carp — both native to Asia — have been migrating toward the lakes since escaping from Deep South fish ponds and sewage treatment plants in the 1970s. The biggest can reach 100 pounds and 4 feet long, consuming up to 40 percent of their body weight daily in plankton, the base of the aquatic food chain. Once established in the lakes, the carp could starve out the prey fish on which popular species such as salmon and whitefish depend.

The carp have already infested parts of the Mississippi and Illinois rivers, driving away many native fish. Silver carp are known to hurtle from the water at the sound of passing motors and slam into boaters with bone-breaking force.

While scientists differ on whether the carp would thrive in the Great Lakes, which are colder, deeper and ecologically different than rivers, many say the risk is too great to take any chances.

"None of us know for certain what their impact would be," University of Notre Dame biologist David Lodge told a House subcommittee this week. "There's only one way to find out, and I don't think any of us want that."

To be fair, the solution environmentalists prefer — cutting ties between the lakes and the Mississippi — would mean reconfiguring some 70 miles of canals and rivers. That's a massive undertaking that could not happen quickly. "We cannot fight biology with engineering alone," Cameron Davis, the Environmental Protection Agency's spokesman on the issue, told the congressional panel.

Yet the federal plan is heavy on technological innovations. Among them: barriers using sound, strobe lights and bubble curtains to repel carp and biological controls to prevent them from reproducing. They're promising measures, but still on the drawing board.

Environmentalists and Great Lakes governors outside of Illinois who want to close the Chicago locks claim it's the best short-term option. But it isn't a foolproof solution, as young carp might still be able to slip through the leaky structures. The Chicago waterways also have other access points to Lake Michigan.

Army Corps of Engineers officials are putting their faith in the two-tiered electric barrier in the Chicago Sanitary and Ship Canal about 25 miles from Lake Michigan, to which they will add a third section this year. It emits pulses to scare off the carp or knock them unconscious if they don't turn back. No carp have been found above the barrier, although biologists have detected their DNA in numerous spots past it and even within the lake itself.

"While we're all talking," Lodge said, "the fish are swimming."

That almost certainly means at least some carp have eluded the device and reached the lake. The government's plan aims to keep their number low enough to prevent them from breeding. The problem is that no one knows how many carp need to make it into the lake to establish a foothold that can't be turned back.

"This is a lot of money to pile into stopgap measures," said Phil Moy, a University of Wisconsin Sea Grant researcher. "It may do some good in the short term, but in the long term it's not going to solve the problem of invasive species on both sides of the divide. Ecological separation has to happen for this to be successful."

Anglers brace for possible invasion of Asian carp

Published
BY MATTHEW OLSON
(article from the Kenosha News)

The invasive Asian carp has yet to migrate to Lake Michigan and into Kenosha waters.

And as federal, state and local leaders debate how to best contain the fish, local anglers are bracing for what the carp could do in the Great Lakes.

Federal officials called for using part-time locks on two Illinois rivers that Asian carp have been located in to prevent the invasive species from pouring into Lake Michigan. The locks would be closed except to allow barges to pass through.

The fish already has bypassed electric barriers in those rivers and are threatening to enter Lake Michigan.

Gov. Jim Doyle and other Great Lakes-area representatives have been seeking permanent locks on these canals to limit the negative effects the Asian carp will have on native aquatic species.

Cliff Dukowitz, a fishing charter captain in Kenosha, said he thought the arrival of the Asian carp could be very damaging for some of the area's most familiar fish.

"If the carp get into Lake Michigan, I believe it will end the salmon fishery and the whitefish population out there," Dukowitz said. "I believe it will ruin everything, but it will take a few years."

Dukowitz said he was not sure what the impact of the proposed federal measures would be, but he would like to see effective action taken.

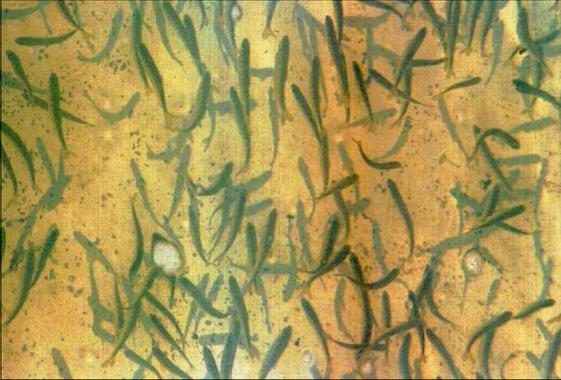

"Whatever would help, they should surely do that," Dukowitz said.

The local fishing waters already have been troubled by earlier invaders, such as the zebra mussel, he said.

"There is no doubt that zebra mussels have had a big effect on the lake trout population," Dukowitz said. "Now the bottom is just covered in mussels."

The carp debate has been occurring at several levels of government. Kenosha Mayor Keith Bosman met with mayors from Cudahy and Milwaukee on Monday about the situation.

"I think the jury is maybe still out as to the depth of the problem," Bosman said. "Given the potential size of these fish and the potential for feeding affecting the food supply of the fish that are indigenous to Lake Michigan, interjecting that fish into that food chain could be a problem that could affect commercial fishing, sport fishing, casual fishing and tourism."

Above are some pictures Lisa Fox had, she shared them for the web gallery. I could not resist and had to show them on the newsletter also. Top is Jim KrKreuser helping at the rearing pond, middle picture some King fry and bottom our sign at the rearing pond. Thanks Lisa and Leroy.

Recipe from the Great Lakes Angler

I just tried a batch of grilled salmon using a recipe from Debra Jean Sportfishing out of Two Rivers, Wi. In one batch, I am now kicking myself for giving away dozens of fish this summer. Get a gallon size zip-lock bag, and pour a quarter cup of olive oil inside. Then dump a heaping tablespoon of blackened fish seasoning inside the bag. Add a half tablespoon of Tarragon seasoning, along with 1/4 to 1/2 teaspoon of garlic powder, and thoroughly mix everything inside the bag. I also added a couple shakes of minced onions to the bag.

Take 2 or 3 pounds of skinless, boneless salmon pieces, rinse and dry them, then dump them in the zip-lock bag. Work the bag until all of the pieces are thoroughly covered with the mixture, then stick in the fridge and marinate it for a good 18 hours. Stick the fish directly from the bag into a fish basket, and grill until it's done. It's tremendous hot, but I think even better cold. Tastes like chicken. BLOOD N GUTS

The Kenosha Sportfishing & Conservation Association

Invites the public to attend its annual swap meet. This is a time to sell, buy, trade, and swap fishing equipment.

In addition, John Collen, a renowned fishing tackle collector and appraiser, will provide free appraisals of antique fishing items. He will also display his collection of wooden plugs, Creek Chub Lures, and old time outboard motors. Wildlife wood carver Paul Wade and Members of the Racine Wood Carvers Club will demonstrate their talents and offer their creations for sale.

Anyone interested in sharing fishing information about Lake Michigan salmon and trout fishing is welcome. Come and find some treasures, bring fishing stories, or just spend the evening having fun hanging out with people that like to talk fishing.

For information or to reserve tables at the swap meet contact Jerry Vigansky at 262-945-4710, or jervig@tds.net.

No one hooked me up with a new job yet? Go figure. Anyway, action on the harbor has been slow the last few days. There were more fish caught on the weekend, but that makes sense because there were more guys fishing. Still mostly Rainbows, small white tube with a waxie still #1 approach, spawn probably #2, one of our European friends just bought a dozen small minnows, so I would guess he's going to jig them on a spoon (like a Swedish Pimple).

Am planning on making an appearance at the Lake Andrea Derby this Sat. (the 30th). Don't think I'll be fishing unless I get someone else to drill the holes for me. I'd like to get the wife out there for a change. We'll see if that happens. Inland? I am still hearing rumors about Center Lake producing Crappies, although I've heard they are small. Hunter came in and said that the Twins were doing well. I have no comment about this because:
A. It is totally unconfirmed. I mean I have not heard this from "anyone" else.
B. I went there earlier in the season and thought it sucked. Of course that doesn't mean that it couldn't have picked up.
C. Hunter is a great guy, and a great friend, but I think sometimes people tend to "embellish" when they talk to him. (How much nicer could I say that?)
If I get any "good" news I'll pass it along. Hopefully the Andrea Derby will be a big success. The guy putting it on is really a good guy, (Al Arndt) so I'm sure it will be. Later, Bob

KENOSHA SPORTFISHING AND CONSERVATION

P.O. Box 746 Kenosha, WI 53144

Helping Everyone Enjoy Fishing!

Next Meeting:

March 1st 7:00 P.M.
At the Moose Lodge

Present will be John Collen, a tackle collector and appraiser, also showing his collection. Wild life carver Paul Wade and the Racine Wood Carvers Club will also be present

The members of the KSFCA wish to thank Mike Steffe's for traveling from Traverse City Mi. to present his lures and strategies. His presentation was outstanding. We wish him the best for 2010.
